Abstract:

In his presentation Prof. Menachem Zur will discuss and demonstrate the complexities of the perception of art-music (not entertainment), presented from the point of view of composers and performers. The appreciation of acoustic information, especially in the experience of contemporary music, is dependent on the abilities of the listeners both to remember the stream of sounds and to reconstruct from them the structures needed to comprehend the syntax of abstract works in both the architectural and emotional senses. The principles of learned schemata and natural schemata aid in this perception and these concepts will be explained.
